has any such statement ever made by me. If such a case exists it is not known to the writer. On the contrary, manufactur-ers and employes, we take it, occupy the positions of American citizens and as such exercise their rights, and with due respect to every other citizen, which certainly guarantees to all the right to vote and acc as such without coercion, restriction or in-timidation. True citizenship acts on this line, and on no other.

Mr. Hilligoss likewise carded the Republican papers, and states that he has written the Sentinel, demaiding that they make a complete retraction. The case is a pe-culiar one, as Hilligoss was in Indianapo-lis and some of his political enemies are willing to wager that he did make statement, but, if so, it was not for publication so near home. Mr. Hilligoss has spent several years at the head of newspepers in Munci-, Huntington and Anderson and he surely would not stagger into reporter's presence with such willful mis-statements, and it is believed the Sentinel manufactured the story in Indianapolis, Ball Bros., Muncie Flint Glass Company, Midland Steel Company, Indiana Iron Com-Midland Steel Company, Indiana Iron Company, Hemingray Glass Company, Architectural Iron Company, Whitely Malleable Castings Company, C. MOUNT AND WALLACE.

They Open the Last Week of the Campaign in Fulton County. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

ROCHESTER, Ind., Oct. 26. - This has been a gala day for the Republicans of Fultor county. The announcement that General Lew Wallace and James A. Mount would be present this afternoon brought forth an immense crowd. The people began coming early this morning. The outtownships sent delegations, and the bands from the surrounding towns and villages were present. The business houses and private residences were profusely decorated. At 11 o'clock a procession over a mile long paraded the principal streets of the city. At 2 o'clock Messrs. Wallace and Mount were escorted to the City Park, when an enthusiastic throng gave the distinguished gentlemen a cordial greeting. The audience was composed principally of farmers, who listened attentively to the remarks of Mr. Mount and applauded vociferously as he made his points. Mr. Mount was in unusually good voice, and handled the money question and the tariff in such a plain and practical manner that an unplain and practical manner that an unprejudiced farmer could not resist the conclusion that the Wilson tariff is largely responsible for the present low prices and general depression. Many old soldiers came to hear General Lew Wallace, who handied the Bryan-Altgeld-Tillman-Debs crowd without gloves, He questioned the sanity of Bryan, and said that he could not conceive of a same man begging ity of Bryan, and said that he could not conceive of a sane man begging the people for their votes and at the same time telling them that a panic would immediately follow his election. His remarks were pointed and extremely sarcastic, and elicited much applause and merriment. Tonight W. D. Owen, Secretary of State, addressed a crowded house at the Academy of Music here. The Republicans of the county are highly elated over the success of the really and it will insure them to make and it will inspire them to make greater efforts for success.

The Rally at Linton. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

LINTON, Ind., Oct. 26 .- This little city will ever remember the big Republican demonstration that occurred here to-day. Nothing in the history of the city or county ever equaled it in numbers of people and enthusiasm. The city was handsomely decorated and was completely taken by the crowds. Hon. S. E. Payne, of New York, and Hon. Smiley N. Chambers, of Indianapolis, were the principal speakers, and 6,000 people listened with marked attention to the addresses. Every township was represented by glee clubs, bands and delegations. All delegations formed outside the city, and at 11:30 o'clock the procession three miles long baraded Main street, taking one hour and ten minutes to pass a given point. No such enthusiasm ever prevailed here. One feature of the parade was a neatly-built car drawn by a traction engine which bore the words: traction engine which bore the words: "Bryan will speak for $500." This set the crowds to cheering.

Boland's Ridiculous Interview. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

ANDERSON, Ind., Oct. 26.-Anderson Republicans are having a good deal of sport over the interview of William Boland, a "wealthy manufacturer of Anderson, who owns a large glass factory in Pendleton," that was sent out yesterday. Mr. Boland was made to say that he would guarantee to start his factory immediately on news of Bryan's election, and would give a voluntary increase in wages of 10 per cent. Mr. Boland further said that, "we manufactured the said that facturers are all in favor of Bryan's elec-tion." Now the facts are that Mr. Boland does not know a thing about the manufac-ture of glass and the only interest he has in a Pendieton factory is that recently acquired at a sale. The Pendleton factory employs ten men when in operation, but it is not running. Boland is ex-county treasurer and a Democratic candidate for election

A Democratic Fizzle. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

ELKHART, Ind., Oct. 25 .- The Popocrats of this section made their principal attempt at an overwhelming display of strength here Saturday night, and nothing that has occurred during this campaign has done more to enthuse Republicans. For two weeks this section, clear over into Michigan, has been drummed to bring in The posters announced that five hundred horsemen would be in line, and bets were made on that number. There were 222 horsemen, sixty-five of them boys. Horsemen, footmen, bandsmen and all numbered 1,057, according to several liberal and independent counts, just about one-third of the number in the Republican parade when the "Generals" were here. Candidate for Congress Kellison and B. K. Foster, a labor leader, were the speakers. They spoke in the old opera house, which holds about five

Watson Speaks for Johnson.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. SHELBYVILLE, Ind., Oct. 26.-The Republicans of the southeast part of this county had a raily at Waldron this aftermoon that proved to be the greatest gathering ever held by any party in that part of the county. Hon. James E. Watson made the address. There were not less than two thousand people present. In closing his talk Mr. Watson urged on all his friends to vote for Hon. Henry U. Johnson, Re-publican candidate for Congress, this re-mark calling forth a tumult of appliance. In mark calling forth a tumult of applause. In this city to-night Hon. H. L. Remmel. Re-publican candidate for Governor of Arkanas, adressed an audience of not less than 1,500 people. It was not known until this morning that Mr. Remmel would be here,

Mitchell's Big Rally.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. MITCHELL, Ind., Oct. 26.-Governor Will Cumback, Hon. C. W. Fairbanks and Col. A. M. Hardy. Republican candidate for Congress from this district, made stirring freight organization, to be known as the speeches here to-day for protection and sound money. Mr. McDoel, general manager of the L., N., A. & C. railroad, spoke this evening, and as a result quite a number of prominent railroad men are here from a distance, excursions bringing crowds from every direction. At 11 o'clock to-day there was a monster parade, with delegations and big wagons from Paoli, Orleans, Lost River, Bryantsville and Bed-ford. Fully 1,500 people were in line.

Ketcham Makes Converts,

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. HARTFORD CITY, Ind., Oct. 26 .- At the conclusion of Wm. A. Ketcham's address here last Saturday afternoon, J. J. Roush, a prominent insurance agent of this city, and well known throughout northeastern Indiana, renounced his intention to vote for Bryan and free silver and came out for McKinley and sound money. Mr. Roush has been a lifelong Democrat. F. L. Mercer, one of the most extensive property owners of this city, and interested in lumber commanies in pearly every town in the ber companies in nearly every town in the gas belt, has renounced the free-silver plat-form and will vote for sound money.

Making Votes for McKinley.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal, DUGGER, Ind., Oct. 26.-Hon. Smiley N. Chambers, of Indianapolis, filled the appointment of Hon. James T. Johnston at this place to-night. A large and attentive audience listened to the speech. The Bryan-hoodium element was present, as usu-BREMERHAVEN, al, but their conduct was so disgusting to decent Democrats that it acted as a boomerang. Some who were undecided have come out boldly for McKinley.

Free-Silver Man Converted.

pecial to the Indianapolis Journal. PORTLAND, Ind., Oct. 26.-James Russell, president of the Free-silver Club of Pennville, last night renounced Democracy and joined the McKinley Club. A tent holding 8,000 people is secured for the Har-rison meeting here next Friday. Repub-lican clubs from Lima, St. Mary's, Celina and Albany will be here on a special train.

Thayer at Etna Green.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. ETNA GREEN, Oct. 26.-The Hon. H. G. Thaver, candidate for elector at large, addressed the largest and most enthusiastic audience assembled here during this campaign. He was given a royal welcome, and satisfied the people that sound money and protected industries meant prosperity and happiness for all classes.

Mr. Young's Side of the Case. To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal:

I see in a special from this place I am charged as playing into the hands of the enemy to defeat Henley, candidate for Appellate Judge. This is malicious, slanderous and false, and without any foundation. I had nothing to do with the publication. and did not know it was published until my attention was called to it. But the half has never been told. I am a Republican but I will not violate my oath of office to screen any criminal, no difference whether he be a Republican or Popocrat, and my answer in the criminal case referred to was filed in good faith, and which I will sustain if ever I can get Mr. Henley's attorney in GEO. Special to the Indianapolis Journal. SCOTTSBURG, Ind., Oct. 26.-Mrs. Eliza McNeeley, an aged lady residing about six miles northeast of this place, died early this morning from injuries inflicted by a vicious buck sheep, which she attempted to drive from the yard. A flock of sheep got into the yard and children were sent to drive them out, but returned, saying they were afraid. Then the old lady went to drive them out and was attacked by a vicious buck, which knocked her down and inflicted wounds in the side which caused her death.

Veedersburg Street Fair.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. VEEDERSBURG, Ind., Oct. 26 .- C. M. Berry, editor of the News, of this place, has for the last few years been holding a product show some day during the month of October. This year the merchants have become interested, and instead of a oneday show, the street fair will be held four days this week. Stock-pens, coops for poultry and display booths for each merchant are being built and decorated on the main thoroughfares and streets of the city. No gambling of any description will be allowed, and the merchants will have entire control of all trade brought to the city. Liberal premiums are offered for all displays. The politicians of all parties are putting forth great energy to attract large crowds. On Wednesday Hon. James E. Campbell, of Ohio, and Hon. John G. Shanklin, of Indiana, will be present to address the Democrats. Thursday, Hon. W. D. Owen and others will speak to the Republicans. Friday, all-parties' day, the Prohibitionist, Hon. W. D. Walter, Hon. Wikiam D. Bynum, for the gold Democrats, and Hon. Eugene V. Debs, for the Populists, will be here. Saturday is farmers' day, and Prof. W. C. ART OUT OF PLACE.

MacMonnies's "Bacchante" Not Suited to New England Atmosphere. Boston Transcript.

The art commission of the city of Boston need not have gone to the trouble of calling in a committee of experts to advise it as to the bronze figure of a Bacchante by Frederic MacMonnies. The Transcript long ago pronounced the statue-extraordinarily clever and fascinating as it is-inappropriate for the courtyard of the Public Li-brary. In face of the criticism from which we have constantly defended the architect and trustees of the library that the art purpose i ad dominated the literary purpose in their p ans and decorations, to offer such a figure showed a lack of tact which might it by no harsher name.

lmost be characterized as defiance, to call Fortunately for the board of trustees of the library, the responsibility of the decision was taken from them, and the cheap and easy comments attributing the verdict to prudery and Puritanism will have no application, as they might have had to an ordinary board of officials, not up in art. The Art Commission is not only composed of cultivated men, but it performs its duties by calling on experts and artists to aid it, so that when the Boston Art Commission acts, its verdict is final and without appeal, as has already been proved. The statement given to the public by the secretary of the commission shows that the best technical authority and councisseurship agree that the Public Library is not the place for this statue. We have no doubt that the sentiment of the community Cincinnati: recording secretary, Mrs. F. at large will eventually uphold this latest A. Aitken, of Decatur, Ill.; treasurer, Mrs. decision of the Art Commission, as it has G. W. Williams, of Delaware, O. done with the others it has made

The Bacchante is unquestionably a very smart performance, indeed far above deserving to be classed with the mere nudi-ties in "art galleries for business men." such as the Hoffman House bar, as a profane newspaper has recently classed it. But this great community does not exist for or by art and artists. It is only a New Eng-land Athens. All the young artists ed-

KILLED BY AN OLD RAM ment of the artists is inevitably technical, professional and one-sided. But in this instance it is opposed to a native sentiment which is not only justifiable and respectable, but is much finer and more delicate. It is not a subject for reproach that we are essentially different from the French. In the discussion of questions of this kind which arise from time to time, it is the fashion among artists, cosmopolitans, men about town and many writers for the press to assume that, because of that mendacious old saw, "to the pure all things are pure," the objections to nudity, license and immodesty in works of art are based upon an impure state of mind which sees a semblance to evil where no real evil exists. This is a too convenient way to dispose of one's opponents. It is no argument to imingrained hostility of American women and of American men who have not lost the American respect for women) for the sort of thing which seems to be all right in the eyes of young Frenchmen and of Galiicized young Americans, is not lightly to be thus set aside by an unworthy scoff.

Then, there is a fitness in all things and, while Mr. MacMonnies's figure would be the gem of any private gallery of modern sculptures, it does not follow that it would be wise or sensible to place it in the Public Library. the Public Library court. That beautiful representation, or suggestion, rather, of a cloistered academe is a spot which is and should be kept sacred to scholarship, study and meditation; and the glaring incongruity of the leaping Bacchante and her sur-roundings there would have been too striking to escape criticism and even ridicule as a bit of mad, youthful excess on the artistic side of the great building's monumental purpose.

Paul Amand Challemel-Lecour. French Statesman and Diplomat.

PARIS, Oct. 26 .- M. Challemel-Lecour is Paul Amand Challemel-Lecour was born at Avranches, May 19, 1827. He obtained a degree in philosophy in 1849, and during the same year was made professor of philosophy in the Lyceum of Pau, afterward, in 1851, accepting a similar position in the Lyceum of Limoges. He was at this time remarkable for his republican ideas, and after being imprisoned at Paris for some months, was exiled from France in 1852. He became, in 1856, professor of French literature at the Polytechnicum in Zurich, and after his return to France was concerned in the management of several journals. A few days after the 4th of Sep-tember, 1870, he was appointed Prefect of the Rhone and Commissary of the Republic. In 1872 he was elected representative Bouches du Rhone in the National sembly and took the place at the Extreme Left. In the senatorial elections in 1876 was again returned from the Bouches du Rhone. FORCING THE DARDANELLES. British Naval Officer's Vivid De scription of the Passage in 1878. New York Sun.

The universal interest excited by the re ports of recent months that a British fleet the Dardanelles has caused many persons abroad to publish reminiscences of time when the passage of the Straits was forced by Admiral Hornby, acting upon orders from London.

It was in February, 1878. For months
England had been in a fever of excitement over the operations of the Russians troops against the Turks. The popular agitation became tumultuous as the reports of Russia's advance toward Constantinople were flashed across the continent. One night a false rumor that Russian soldiers had appeared in the suburbs of the Sultan's capital spread panic through the House of Commons and brought to the doors of Parliament a mob that howled for revenge and war.

Long before the Dardanelles were forced operations had been admiral's plan of operations had been laid before the naval authorities in London. It was as follows: don. It was as follows:

The Agincourt and Achilles were to endeaved to silence the guns in Fort Namasghia—the first of the Turkish defenses to be passed, mounting, it was reported, some twenty heavy modern guns, Krupps and Armstrongs—at the same time keeping far enough down stream to be out of range of some old-fashioned monster bronze guns mounted at the castle of Kilid Bahar. mounted at the castle of Kilid Bahar, a little above, and also firing their starboard ow guns at the Sultanieh fort on the opposite side of the Straits. The Alexandria and Sultan were to undertake the destruction of the fifty-ton Krupp gun at Fort Tchernak, and with their port guns at the same time to engage any forts on the European side which should open fire on them. The Swiftsure and Temeraire were, meanwhile to pass on to the stock of the Medical Company of the Medical Comp while, to pass on to the atack of the Med-gidieh fort, the strongest of all the forts, mounting thirteen six-inch breech-loading Krupp guns-and to do as much damage as posible until the other ships were free to go to their assistance. There remained but the fort of Nagara, two and a half miles further on, which would be dealt with as opportunity served when the others had

On Feb. 12, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the Admiral at last received the order to make his way into the Sea of Marmora. At daylight on Feb. 12 he weighed anchor from Besika. There was a strong north-east wind at the time; it snowed, and the weather in general was described officially as "very thick." How the passage was made is told thus in a letter from an officer aboard one of the war ships:

"Every preparation for active retaliation was made, all the men being fully armed and stationed at quarters, and the tops filled with riflemen and Gatlings, and the ucated in France will unite in denouncing the action of the Art Commission as a plece of Philistinism. That much may be taken for granted. But with respect to questions of this delicate nature, the judg-to fire only at the guns and batteries, and to injure the houses as little as possible. We neared the fifty-ton Krupp mounted on the earthwork near Tchernak at a speed of eight knots, in the midst of a dense fog and half a gale of wind and snow, having to pass within two hundred varies or this forpass within two hundred yards or this formodable piece, against whose shot armor would have proved of very little use. Had it opened fire, our orders were to dismount the gun and destroy the works round it. "As we came on in single line ahead, on board every ship breathless silence reigned, broken only by the dull thud, thud, thud of the engines. At the guns stood their crews, one man ready to slip out the tompion, others to run the gun out, while the captain of each gun stood immovable, lanyard in hand and outstretched, ready for that one jerk which would have sent an enormous shell flying on its deadly errand. Our hearts were in our mouths as the flagship came abrest of the Tchernak gun; the pun of smoke, the flash, the reverberating crash were intently watched for while every minute seemed a whole year. But nothing happened, and then the tension was relieved, for we had passed the first line in peace.

"As the fleet proceeded after this the wind increased, the fog grew denser, the snow and sleet fell more thickly still, while the current ran dead against the ships. In these circumstances and in this weather were the narrows of the straits-where they contract to less than three-quarters of a mile across-traversed safely. After that came the forts of Zocala and Hamazieh, which also were passed in the same breath-less silence as before. It was here we had been told that the Turkish torpedoes and submarine mines had been thickly sown right across the channel. But no, again all was well with us. Nothing occurred to bar our progress up the straits, no torpedo ex-ploded under our bottom, no shot or shell ploded under our bottom, no shot or shell came crashing against our sides. When Cape Sestes was passed the guns were unloaded and the ammunition returned to the magazines, as henceforth the passage permanently widened to a general width of two miles across. Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, the present Simultaneously with this announcement an commander-in-chief of Great Britain's Med-iterranean fleet, took part in the passage as commander of the Temeralre.

As regards the difficulties to be encountered by a fleet trying to pass the Darda-nelles nowadays in the face of Turkish opposition, the Constantinople correspondlent of the London Daily Graphic says: "The numerous forts we passed between Kum Kalah and Gallipoli presented a most formidable appearance, and this was es men as significant. It is obviously intended, says the Times, to show the desire of workpecially noticeable at Chanak-Kalessi, where every ship that passes up to Coning in harmony with the interests and ideas of the Western world. stantinople must stop and have its papers inspected. The channel is not more than a mile in width at this point and inmediately opposite is Kilid-Bahar, also very strongly fortified. Both of these commanding po-sitions now simply bristle with guns of every caliber, which would have to be silenced before any hostile ship could hope to pass them safely. Beyond all this, there is no room for doubt that the fairway is plentifully sown with mines and torpedoes and this arm of defense would, in all probability, prove the most diastrous to any fleet rash enough to attempt a rush

BISHOP KEANE'S REMOVAL. What It Means-Revival of the Catholie Controversy. New York Tribune.

The sudden and unexpected removal last The facts are briefly these: Bishop Keane has been the first and only rector of the Catholic University. Its policy has been largely shaped by him. Much of the money already contributed to it is said to have been given to it because he was at its It is further declared that since his deposition some persons who had promised to remember the university have decided not to do so. The Bishop appears to have been an excellent administrator. His aim has been to make the university at once a fountain of religion and learning, loyal to the teachings of the church, but at the same time fully abreast of the cholarship of the age. In this aim he has had the cordial co-operation of distinguished Catholics, and in his intercourse with non-Catholics has earned their respect and good But Bishop Keane is a liberal, and to this fact rumor ascribes his fall. He has been one of the most active leaders in the called American wing of the Cath Church. He opposed the Cahensly mo ment, which, it will be remembered, was an attempt to segregate the foreign element in the church, especially the mans, into a compact mass by itself. The movement failed at the time, because of Mgr. Satolli's opposition to it, and the liberal element, at the head of which were such men as Archbishop Ireland and Bishop Keane, gained a temporary victory. But in ecclesiastical, as in secular poli-tics, nothing is certain. The anti-liberal or ultremontane party, as it may be called, surrendered for the time, but did not die. It had for its leaders some of the ablest and most astute leaders in the church. It has had influential advocates not far from the papal throne in Rome, and it has now apparently succeeded in discrediting the liberal party with the Pope. Whether the appointment of the new apostolic delegate is or is not an ultramontane victory, yet remains to be seen. But there can be no doubt that the deposition of Bishop Keane from the rectorship of the institution with whose life he was closely identified is a crushing blow to the liberals, and they so regard it. Archbishop Ireland, impetuous as usual, openly questions its wisdom, and talks about re-electing Bishop Keane to the rectorship at the meeting of the trustees in Washington, on Oct. 21. An utterance like this is almost unprecedented, and serves to show the intensity of the feeling between the two great parties in the American Catholic Church. While both parties are entirely loyal to the church, the differences between them are irreconcilable. The ultramontanes are the traditionists of the church. They lay emphasis on the ecclesiastical side its life, and they are inclined to stretch to their utmost limit the dogmas that have grown out of the papal claims. The liberals are in favor of putting the church in line with modern thought and modern ideas, so far as can be done consistently with its be-liefs and principles. They are especially anxious to have the church commend itself to the American people, and they are, therefore, opposed to fastening on the American church any merely national or race opinions or customs of Europe that would alienate Americans from the church. As a rule, noncatholics hope for the ulti-mate triumph of the liberals. But some of them who are most strongly opposed to Roman Catholicism would like the ultramontanes to become dominant, because, in their opinion, the policy of the ultramontanes would weaken and discredit the church in this country, while the policy of the liberals would strengthen it.

How Mr. Cleveland Feels. Washington Post.

The official had just come from a long talk with the chief executive. The campaign was pretty thoroughly discussed dur-ing the talk, and undoubtedly created the impression on his mind that the President has no doubt of Bryan's defeat. This official continued: "The President has kept a close watch on the campaign. He has followed it step by step. He is well posted on the situation in every State. Broke the Maine Liquor Law. Letter in London Mail.

Having got this wrong-end-of-a-telescopic view of an American election, the only di-version left was to break the Maine liquor law. It was put into my head by the genial salutation of a gentleman who could only just keep on his legs. In Maine, as you know, the buying and selling of alcoholic liquor is unconditionally forbidden under I do not quite know what penalty. I thought I would try to incur that unknown penalty.

S. PENNSYLVANIA ST. Bethinking me that the barber is the friend of man, I went in and was shaved. "You an't buy a drink here, I'm told," I began. "No," said the barber stolidly. "I suppose people do, though." "I don't know much about it, I fancy there's a druggist or two. " "Then, as if by a powerful effort of memory, "There's a bar right here where you can get it." he said.

Following his direction I walked down a long passage, and at the back of the house, among sculleries and the like, there was a bar indeed. "Whisky," said I, hardliy, and whisky was produced. It was exceptionally good whisky, and it was no dearer than anywhere else. "Isn't this what they call a prohibition State?" I asked. "It's supposed to be," grinned the bartender. "But don't the police or somebody come down on you?" "Now and then they take it in their head to make a fuss." Such is temperance legislation in its chosen seat. It was im-Bethinking me that the barber is the friend legislation in its chosen seat. It was impossible that this bar, in the very center of the town, should not be known and used by everybody that cared to know and use it. While I was there a workingman came in and bought a bottle of whisky and took it away with him. He remarked ironically that he had dyspepsia, and I expect he has by now. be for the first downward stepping-stone to Portland in the old. THE ORIGINAL JACK HORNER. He Really Existed and Got a "Plum," but Was Not a Good Boy.

San Francisco Examiner. Jack Horner, of the Christmas pie, really existed, though whether he deserved the title of "good boy" is exceedingly doubtful. He was, however, a fortunate rogue.

When Henry VIII suppressed the monasteries and drove the monks from their nests the title deeds of the Abbey of Melis were demanded by the commissioners. The Abbot of Glastonbury determined that he would send them to London, and, as the documents were very valuable, and the road infested with thieves, it was difficult to get them to the metropolis safely.

To accomplish this end be devised a very To accomplish this end be devised a very ingenious plan. He ordered a savory pie to be made, and inside he put the documents—the finest filling a pie ever had—and intrusted this dainty to a lad named Horner to carry up to London to deliver safely into the hands for whom it was intended. But the journey was long and the day cold, and the boy was hungry, and the pie was tempting, and the chance of detection was small. So the boy broke off a piece of the pie, and beheld a parchment within. He pulled it forth innocently enough, wondering how it could have found its way there tled up in pastry, and arrived in town.

The parcel was delivered, but the title deeds of Mells Abbey were missing.

The fact was that Jack had them in his pocket. These were the juiciest plums in the pie. Great was the rage of the commissioners, and heavy the vengeance they dealt out to the monks.

But Master Jack Horner kept his secret and when peaceable times were restored he claimed the estates and received them. Nickname for an Archbishop.

London Letter. Nicknames, as I wrote you some weeks ago, are noticeably prevalent here. Du Maurier, you know, was called "Kicky" by his friends. Now the startling fact has leaked out that the late Dr. Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury, also had a nickname. The reverend gentleman, you may not be aware, had a son who, it seems, was guilty of that light novel "Dodo," which you probably read a couple of summers ago. Well, the irreverent always called the father of the novelist by the sacreligious name of the "Dodo's papa."
